The national and global environments for discovery and innovation have seen significant changes in the last decade. Today, the environment is complex--requiring deep understanding of economic, capital, technological, environmental, and social forces and of the markets in which solutions will realize sustained success. University-based entrepreneurship is at the nexus of this environment. Students of entrepreneurship and the faculty that are training the innovation workforce are uniquely positioned as agents in the movement of discovery and invention. This volume builds a large body of scholarship specific to entrepreneurship by providing perspective on how the field of study looks forward and reshapes to inform and prepare today's and tomorrow's highly sophisticated entrepreneurial generations.

The contributing papers examine the most current topics, perspectives, challenges, and visions of research.. The volume reflects the sense of urgency and commitment to respond to the call to lead the coming generations in entrepreneurial spirit and excellence. The contributions begin to define a roadmap for university-based entrepreneurship
